Dr Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus

Director General of the World Health Organisation (WHO)

Avenue Appia 20

Brussels, 29 November 2021

Dear Mr Borrell,

Dear Dr Tedros,

Re: International Scientists and Leaders ask a Global Response of Collaboration with Africa on COVID-19 following Omicron Outbreak

We, over a hundred academics and leaders from Europe, Africa, US and elsewhere, are concerned with the lack of action for vaccination in Africa and solidarity with Africa.

The COVID-19 Variant of Concern, Omicron, reported by the South African government on 24th of November, must result in a reset of the global response to curb the pandemic.

The science is absolutely clear: until everyone is vaccinated no one is safe.

While 63% of people in high-income countries are fully vaccinated, just 1.4% of people in low-income countries are fully vaccinated (Amnesty International, quoting Our World in Data, 21.10.2021).

The vaccine-inequality is shocking. Rich countries have been buying most of the world's supplies without any strategy to fulfil the needs of low-income countries. The emergence of Omicron points to the need for global solidarity – as a moral imperative as well as out of sheer self-interest.

A global strategy to fight the pandemic must include a plan to protect Africa.

New variants of Concern will continue to emerge and are likely to become increasingly dangerous in the absence of such a strategy.

There is no way that isolation of Africa could be the solution to this problem. We ask that the response is based on science.

Leadership is required in order to act now, and this should include:

1. Financial and technical support for the establishment of vaccine production sites in Africa;
2. An immediate plan to transfer vaccines to Africa to start widespread vaccination programmes;
3. Assistance in wide-spread vaccination campaigns and for building trust in the effectiveness on vaccinations.

We ask that the EU together with nations around the world, to stand together in solidarity and for all responses to be based on science.

Sincerely,

Hon Fortune Z Charumbira, Acting President, Pan African Parliament
